

Full Day Reef Fishing

The 600-mile long Mesoamerican Reef stretches from Southern Mexico to the tip of Honduras, so it easily covers the entirety of the 240-mile long Belizean coastline. Located 19 miles from the coast at it's farthest point in Southern Belize and less than a mile at it's closest point in Northern Belize, Belizeans and the tourists that visit have always had an intimate relationship with the reef and it's marine life. Home to hundreds of species of fish – as well as turtles, rays, sharks, and manatee – it truly is a living breathing national treasure. With all the marine life it supports, you can correctly assume that fishing along the reef usually offers a lot of action and variety. Light tackle fishing inside of the reef typically features several species of snappers and jacks, kingfish, and big barracuda. Fishing along the outside of the reef will give you access to all of those as well as bigger species of snapper, grouper, and wahoo. Reef fishing in Belize allows you to fish with poppers or crank baits, drift live sardines, chunk baiting, or do vertical jigging. While you may not catch monsters here, the real claim to fame of reef fishing in Belize is the incredible variety.

Belize's Southern Reef is an angler's paradise with an abundance of marine life. Weather reef trolling or perfecting your skills, you will have an unforgettable fishing experience.
